Dear Honorable Judge Stivers,

I am writing this letter about a great friend, Faraday Hosseinipour with whom I have known for approximately 9 years. My background by trade is chiropractic and I have met people from all over the world. I must admit that there are only a handful of people in this country that have a heart of gold such as Faraday.

While I was making a career transition, Faraday was one of my biggest supporters. To make the shift from chiropractic to the network marketing/direct sales industry caused me to receive a ton of backlash. Having experience in the direct sales industry, I had the privilege to be able to witness Ms. Faraday break records in the network marketing industry. It was not so much about her breaking records, but moreso, how she was able to achieve it in record breaking time. She used a simple method which was to "give back" to her team members and continue to develop leadership. Faraday would do nonstop skype, google hangout, and zoom meetings (which was not as popular as it is today) to connect with her team members from all over the world. She would give so many people hope and inspiration and would handle adversity with ease. Her positive energy was contagious.

I have personally witness her save several people from foreclosure, evictions, and even a car repossession and completely be an advocate as well as a strong support structure for many people in need. What is even more interesting is that she did not 'brag' or share that information publicly. She helped change lives for the betterment.

Faraday also helped me during my career transition period by simply being available. It was also not her duty to reach out and check on me while I had just relocated to a third world country where I knew absolutely no one. However, her words of encouragement and her ability to coach others to help reach their potential really came in handy during some of the loneliest moments of my life. My story may be unique, but this was something that Faraday did on a regular basis with so many people and never mentioned it. She had a passion for helping people and of course she loved her animals!!!

Faraday was only a distributor with the company. She was not an owner, a partner, nor did she make any executive or corporate decisions on any of the products or the direction of the company. She was a simple distributor as everyone else and she invested a ton of resources and money back into her team. After Faraday walked away from network marketing, I still continue to maintain my relationship with both Faraday and her husband, Dave. Prior to getting involved in the network marketing industry, Faraday was very successful in the timeshare business. After I2G, she would go on to launch her own travel agency. She took the same work ethic as well as her passion for helping people and transferred that energy into launching an extremely successful travel agency. Not only was she incredible at what she did, but she was an honest person with pure character and integrity. I referred several clients to her in the past for $0 monetary gain, but I knew that any client that I sent to Faraday—she would take good care of them. My family has used her on several occasions and everything is always a 5-star experience. She was such a competitor that she wanted to find clients the best prices and have the best experience. However, she was not a greedy person. Not only would she save her clients a ton of money, but she would even offer her own personal commissions to some of the actual client. She did not have to do this, but the reason that so many of her clients loved her is because she was genuine and she knew how to build solid relationships. Faraday was an open book and everything was not about the monetary gain for Faraday, but rather the fact that she truly wanted to help people. For people who lost their money with the previous company—Faraday wanted to make things right by helping as many people as she could. However, she could only do so much by herself from a financial standpoint.

From my experience with Faraday and Dave, they have never done anything illegal nor have been a part of something with mal intentions. Her character and integrity is priceless as she is an amazing person. Honorable Judge Stivers, Ms. Faraday has changed so many lives for the betterment and has one of the most spectacular travel agencies that I know. I pray that you take this letter as well as her character into consideration upon deciding your ultimate verdict. Thank you for your prompt attention.

Sincerely,
